(b)(3)/IRC § 6103(e)(7); (b)(5)/Deliberative Process Privilege; (b)(7)(A)	Certain of the withheld information is deliberative in that it contains opinions and/or recommendations reflecting the "give-and-take" of the agency's deliberative processes which may or may not have led to final agency determinations. The disclosure of this information would expose the decision-making processes of the agency in such a way as to discourage candid discussion within the agency and undermine its ability to perform its tax administration functions. It is therefore withheld pursuant to the deliberative process privilege under FOIA exemption 5. Further, even though certain of this information may be factual material, because the selective process to determine what actions should be taken at proposed times reveals the tactical and strategic thought processes of IRS personnel such that the factual data is bound up with the deliberative discussions of strategy employed by IRS personnel conducting the examination.
